A Horrible Crime Horribly Punished at Greensburg, Kentucky.

From the Russellville (Kv.) Herald.) We are informed that a horrible crime We are informed that a normine crime was committed by a negro man, upon the person of a white lady named Mrs. Newman, in the neighborhood of Greenville, Ky., on last Friday. In the morning the lady told her husband that she and her son were going to spend the day at a neighbor's house, and if they did not return that night be need not feel uneasy. Between her own and her neighbor's farm neighbor's house, and if they did not return that night he need not feel measy. Hetween her own and her neighbor's farm ake was met by the negro, who violated her person, then murdered her and her son. The next morning her husband started to his neighbor's farm to escort his wife and son home, and found them on the roadside brutaity murdered. The news sood spread—men collected—investigated the matter, and soom were saisfied as to who was the guilty wretch. He was arrested that day, and made a full confession of his guilt. While in the hands of no officer he was taken possession of by the excited populace, in the hands of an officer he was taken possession of by the excited populace, who at once decided to amear him with tar and burn him at the stake; but whilst was gone, the perty appointed to procure the tar and hung the negro to a tree till he was dead. His head was then severed from the body and posted in the public square of Greenville, on astake set in the ground in front of the court-house, and no one in front of the court-house, and no one in front of the same as a state of the party appointed to procure the tar was gone, the populace became impatient and hung the negro to a tree till he was dead. His head was then severed from the foreuville, on astake set in the ground in front of the court-house, and no one in the front him at the stake; but whilst he was transponents for traveling.
